SUDDEN REVERSAL SEEN IN FOREIGN POLICY OF RUMANIA

King Carol Appears To Be Edging Away From The Allies GUARDS' ALLEGIANCE
Carol Patches Up Differences With The Pro-Nazi Iron Guard

By International News Service
BUCHAREST, Mar. 16—A sudden reversal in Rumania's foreign policies, with King Carol edging away from the Allies, in favor of Russia and Germany, loomed today, following the announcement that Carol had patched up his differences with the pro-Nazi Iron Guard.

The Iron Guard, it was stated, pledged allegiance to King Carol, despite the fact that it has been outlawed for almost a year. (The London Daily Express said it appears certain that Rumania already has obtained a guarantee of her frontiers against Russia, Hungary and Bulgaria.)

Besides restoration of the anti-Semitic Iron Guard, the Daily Express said Germany succeeded in securing the right to organize the youth of Rumania's 750,000 German minority residents.)

Although the Iron Guard is being restored to good standing, the government spokesman insisted that the move does not mean a change in Rumanian foreign policy.

During the past few weeks King Carol has been edging away from the Allies, in favor of Russia and Germany, loomed today, following the announcement that Carol had patched up his differences with the pro-Nazi Iron Guard.

By Percy Winner
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
ROME, Mar. 16—Returning to Rome for his second visit in less than a month, Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles today began a swift series of conferences which may have a vital bearing on whether Europe's future shall be continued war or peace.

Welles, who is climaxing his fact-finding mission for President Roosevelt, talked with King Victor Emmanuel at the Quirinal Palace for nearly eight minutes.

Then the American diplomat hurried to the office of Italian Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano, with whom he conferred for 70 minutes. It was Welles' second lengthy meeting with Ciano, the first having occurred shortly after his first arrival in Italy.

WILL REBUILD BRIDGE IN SELLERSVILLE BORO'

State-Owned Span To Be Of Re-inforced Concrete, 45 Feet in Width

OVERALL LENGTH, 594'

SELLERSVILLE, Mar. 16—According to word received by Sellersville borough officials, this week, the state-owned bridge over Branch Creek in the center of this borough, is to be rebuilt.

Sealed proposals have been asked for by I. Lamont Hughes, secretary of highways, these to cover a reinforced concrete span, 33 feet wide, with additional sidewalks, making the entire structure 45 feet in width.

The reason for the State Department of Highway's decision to reconstruct the bridge is that it has become a bottleneck for traffic on Route 309, which connects Philadelphia and Allentown and Bethlehem. Several accidents have taken place on it, and others in various parts of the borough may have occurred because the bridge, narrow compared to the rest of Main street, snarled traffic at times.

A rough estimate of the cost was $250,000, although the exact cost will not be known until after the bids are opened on March 29th. Secretary Hughes' special orders also state that as soon as possible afterward the project will begin.

Plans from Mr. Hughes indicate that the bridge proper will be 131 feet long, and that the whole finished job, including approaches, is to be 594 linear feet.

Early indications were that 90

BADGER BEDTIME CHART

This is one of a series of articles dealing with the activities in the schools throughout this area.

With approach of the Easter season, a suitable program is arranged for presentation by pupils of four grades at Maple Shade public school, Newport Road. The grades taking part are one, two, three and four, and the four upper grades will be entertained.

The title of the play which will be included is "The Easter Bunny," and the coach is Miss Kathryn Griffie. In charge of the rhythm band, which will also give numbers are Miss Mildred Congell and Miss Griffie.

The date of the Easter presentation is Thursday, March 21st, it being conducted during morning assembly.

From grades one and two, taught by Miss Griffie, the following have been chosen to participate in the play: Christine Wentzel, Paul Leyden, Violet Heath, Catherine Butler, Frank Reichert, Jack Watts, John Eaton, Jean Alexander, Mable Holeman, Nancy Puglia, Jane Alexander, Charles Sander. Recitations by students of these two grades will include: Shirley Millard, Violette Rosset, Mable Holeman, Howard Reis, Virginia Madden, Isabel Coverdale, James Coverdale, Catherine Zobel, Walter Johnson.

Miss Condell's grade three and four pupils who will recite are: Gertrude Obiedzenski, Paul Killian, Clara Besinger, Dolores Yates, Homer Slaughter.

The entire school of eight grades will take a trip to a dairy and witness operation of a rotolator, in Plainsboro, N. J., on March 29th, making the journey in the school buses.

Sixth grade members are drawing maps of the country, and will fill in the states in the order in which they were admitted to the union.

Miss Anna Kirby, teacher of grade four in Badger School, State Road, has hit upon the idea of a "bedtime chart" in an effort to add to the weight and improve general health of her pupils. On the chart is recorded daily the time at which each pupil retired the previous night. This, it is believed, is gradually aiding in earlier retirement.

The sand table in this room, at present, is being prepared with a Holland scene. An informal Easter program is planned for Thursday next, prior to the Easter holidays.

PALM SUNDAY

It is more than 1,900 years since men beheld that marvelous scene, the first Palm Sunday. It was the coronation of a new king, the setting up of a new power on earth. The new King was Jesus, the Galilean carpenter, son of Joseph in the flesh, Son of God in the spirit. The new power was the power of truth and love, which He told His disciples was about to transform the world.

A prophecy hard to believe then, a prophecy hard to believe today!
The world will be transformed, no doubt. When we look at it through the far-ranging eye of history, we see it constantly approaching higher forms and nobler things—constantly, but how slowly!

But on the first Palm Sunday the crowds in Jerusalem, especially His admiring Galileans, actually for a few hours believed that the new kingdom, the new order of human life, were going to be set up immediately, and what monarch ever had so unique an installation, riding on an ass' foal, in fulfillment of the prophecy, and acclaimed by glad multitudes waving palms and strewing garlands and robes in the path of His triumphal progress!

Think of all that Jerusalem had suffered from the infamies of human greed, human ambition, human selfishness, and the cruelty of war especially, and then picture to yourself the emotion with which His hearers must have received His incomparably lovely revelation of the blessedness of human life when men cease self-seeking and find their highest and only satisfaction in loving God and one another.

As He came riding into the city on that beautiful spring Sabbath acclaimed by His Galilean disciples it is any wonder that the simple-hearted people rose and greeted him with waving palms and spread their robes in the streets for Him to ride upon? Such were the honors accorded customarily to great conquerors, but what conqueror ever vied in greatness and royal splendor with Him?

No, the wonder is that the people allowed themselves so soon afterward to be turned against Him by the false and selfish misrepresen-tations of their rulers, and consented to the ignominious death on Good Friday of that noble Champion whom on the Sabbath morning previous they had recognized as King and Lord.

Millions of us living now, so many centuries after, tell ourselves that had we taken part in that wonderful demonstration—the coronation of the young Prophet-King—we could never have forgotten Him and deserted Him as the Jerusalem multitudes did in the space of a few days.

We flatter ourselves that we would have been more faithful than the Twelve, to say nothing of the multitude, and that the King of Love and Truth would have had some other throne than the "one of ignominy" on Calvary. Again a contrast between our wisdom and that of God! No other throne in human history ever compared in glory with that of Jesus on His sacred cross. How beautiful the ovation of the first Palm Sunday, but how childish simple! It was Calvary, not Palm Sunday, that made Jesus the King of Kings after all.

The pen is mightier than the sword, but don't ask us to prove it.

The CAIRO GARTER MURDERS

By VAN DYKE
MASON

CHAPTER XVI

Hugh North was placidly helping himself to a fascinating little dessert cake when Hasid Pasha made his way through the crowd. In his astonishment North all but choked, for smiling up at the Egyptian and resting a slender hand on her host's arm, was that same raven-haired girl who had lurked behind the hanging with an automatic half drawn!

Whatever her profession, the girl in gray was a flawless actress. Not by the least tremor of a skillfully blued eyelid, not by the least involuntary tension of her mouth corners did she betray their recent encounter.

Hasid smiled a friendly smile.
North wondered of what nationality this serene young woman would prove to be. As he drew near his gray-blue eyes swiftly searched the depths of hers.

"Captain North—Miss Moira McLeod."

Entirely disarming was his smile as he bent over her hand and declared himself privileged.

The Egyptian meanwhile had lit a cigarette and a quizzical wrinkle hovered about his rather heavy lips.
"Because you are a favored guest, I deprive myself and leave Miss McLeod in your charge, Captain," he chuckled. "See that you keep good watch over her. A bienot."

"Fancy meeting you here," North drawled, but Miss McLeod only responded with, "Now I'm wondering what His Opulence meant by that last?"

"You shouldn't wonder." He took her gently but firmly by the elbow.
"Now come along, young woman, and explain yourself."

"Thank you," she sighed upon receipt of a brimming glass of champagne. "Go n-eirighe an t-adh leat!"

"Whatever that means, I didn't do it," he laughed. "What does it mean, my fair colleen?"

"Good luck in Gaelic—Erse, I should say. Thanks for not giving me away. You won't be sorry."

"I'm not so sure," North countered. "In principle I'm dead against strong-arm tactics. I wonder whether you'd satisfy my curiosity on one point?"

Moira McLeod hesitated, helped herself to a salted nut before replying with an impish smile, "That depends."

"Which of those hombres in the study were you—er—looking for?"

"Neither," she flashed, and then to his surprise she colored to the roots of her bobbed blue-black hair.
"I—I'm awfully sorry I can't talk about what happened. You'll simply have to believe I had good reasons for being where I was. You do understand, don't you? That silly little pistol was for self-protection—from men who try to look for garters, perhaps!"

Captain North laughed and asked,
"What do you do here in Cairo?"

"Oh, amuse myself and have a go at what sports there are. During the 'season' I also scribble society notes for a Manchester newspaper.
I like it here. Cairo is so vital, such a hodgepodge of people and ideas."

Then Miss McLeod asked, "What are you doing here?"

"I'm on vacation."

"Really?"

"Yes, really. I hope to get in some gazzle shooting in the desert."

"And your friend, Monsieur Le-vassaur," she inquired innocently;

"is he also interested in gazelle shooting?"

Thereupon North released a small mental spring which tilted gallons of cold caution over this young woman's rising appeal. "His hunting tastes run in other directions I imagine. Tell me, do you know of anyone with a blue hand—or do those two words mean anything to you?"

"Why no!" she replied, then all at once he sensed her withdrawal behind a shell of reserve. Eureka!
It did mean something! "I've heard of blue balloons and pink elephants but a—" She broke off, turning to face a group of cheerful young subalterns.

"Come along, Moira. They've made up a table of chemin-de-fer in the next room." Despite her half-hearted laughing protests, Moira was borne away and flashed her late companion a derisive little "face."

Hugh North was gazing into his glass when a servant came deferentially to report that the Captain was desired on the telephone. Though the speaker did not give his name, he immediately recognized Kilgour's anxious voice.

"Can you come at once to 18½ Sharia El Hafaroua?"

"Of course," was all North said and five minutes later was making excuses to his host.

"What a shame!" the Egyptian lamented in courteous accents. "Already your friends give you no time. But I will be patient. In some ways Cairo is the smallest of cities.
I am almost sure we shall meet again before you leave."

North politely expressed a similar hope. "I may be here longer than I expect—a friend has asked me to transact some business for him." Then he cautiously threw bait on the waters. "I should welcome information concerning Monsieur Le-vassaur—purely of a business nature, of course."

"Levassaur?" Expressive brows became raised. "But of course. A word of caution, there—do not be in a hurry to close with him and now, my friend, adieu."

The man from G-2 was claiming a clean but well-worn sun helmet when Natika Black brushed by long enough to say softly, "I shall be at home all evening—if you have time, call me up."

Before he could make reply, the lovely creature lost herself among guests talking louder and faster under the influence of cocktails.

Reclining on the back seat of a touring car, apparently one of Hasid Pasha's numberless automobiles, Captain North behaved a lim-bering sigh and gazed fixedly up into a sunset sky.

The car, in taking a short cut, entered a street so narrow that waiters were forced to pick up chairs of the tables alongside. The driver aroused North's attention by the vigor with which he shook his fist at an idling pedestrian, shouting, "Imshi! Kel ibn Kel! Imshi!" One side, dog and son of a dog!

Necessarily the car's progress slowed, whereupon North felt bil-lows of hot and dirty air beat in his face. He reached for a handkerchief and...

Only because his reflexes had been trained to lightning reaction was he able to twitch violently aside, all but avoiding a heavy earthenware pot. As it was, the ponderous missile merely grazed his shoulder instead of crushing in his skull.

Today's Quiet Moment

(By Howard L. Zepp, Th. M.)
A King of kings art Thou, O Christ. As our King and Lord, we would join in the acclaim of those who went forth in the olden time to meet Thee with joyful cries of "Hosanna." May none of us withhold from Thee a welcome to our hearts and to our homes. Come and reign over us. Amen.

Carol reportedly pardoned hundreds of Iron Guardists, the majority of whom were imprisoned since last September following the assassination of Premier Armand Calinescu.

Many other Iron Guard members, who fled to havens in Germany, were reported ready to return to Rumania. It was assumed the pro-Nazi organization leaders have pledged immediate abandonment of all activities against Carol's government.

The determination of the Rumanian Government to retain its present foreign policy was seen as evidence that Carol wishes to maintain a neutrality based on friendliness with both Europe's belligerent camps.

The question of whether the King will permit the Iron Guard to be represented in official circles, but it was believed strong German pressure is being exerted on Carol toward this end.

It was clear from the attitude of government officials that Rumania is fully aware of her critical situation now that the Soviet-Finnish war is ended and Russia as well as Germany working days will be required to complete the project.

Several businessmen and property owners petitioned Borough Council to have a temporary bridge put across the creek while the job is under way. Council refused to do anything unless the County Commissioners give aid.

Council said, however, that the contractor will provide a temporary crossing place for pedestrians. Meanwhile Parkside borough is faced with the problem of taking care of a heavy flow of new traffic while the bridge is in course of construction.

The County Commissioners built the bridge several decades ago. Later the Lehigh Valley Transit Company built a steel suspension bridge beside it for trolleys. The latter was bought later by Sellersville borough. When Route 309 was rebuilt by the state the bridge automatically became state-owned.

have begun intensive diplomatic activities in the Balkans.

Russia has long coveted the Bessarabian districts of Rumania, once Soviet territory, and a tug-of-war has been under way between Germany and the Allies since outbreak of their conflict with Rumania's rich oil wells as the prize.

The reconciliation between Carol and the Iron Guard, climaxing a sanguinary feud of long-standing, obviously was negotiated to consolidate Rumania's position in the face of increasing war hazards facing her on all sides.

One of the chief targets of Iron Guardist attack has been King Carol's Jewish-born friend, the red-haired Magda Lupescu. Her expulsion and even death often has been demanded by Iron Guardists.

Farm School Graduates Include Three Refugees

orchards, and nurseries, they are equipped to compete with boys reared on the farm. An announcement recently issued by the president of the school, Dr. Harold B. Allen, indicates that many requests from practicing farmers for the services of these young men have been received. The majority of the graduates will leave for their positions on the day of graduation.

The National Farm School, founded in 1896 by the late Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf of Philadelphia, is located at Farm School, Bucks County, Pennsylvania. Notwithstanding the fact that the course is designed to meet the needs of the city boy, young men with rural backgrounds, too, will find unusual advantages in this type of farm training, and are also welcome. A new class of 50 students, representing various states, and including an additional number of refugees, will be entered on March 26th. Special arrangements are made whereby young men who will graduate from high school in June can enter The National Farm School after the close of the high school course.

The total enrollment of the school averages 185.
